Historical Note
Project Mayflower was conceived by Warwick Carlton, an English Public Relations officer under Montgomery in Africa, as a gesture to celebrate British-American ties. The project became a reality when Charlton met Felix Fenston, a wealthy London yacht owner, in 1954 and persuaded him to contribute the initial capital. The London-based “Project Mayflower, Ltd.” then discovered that Plimoth Plantation, Plymouth, Mass., had already commissioned the naval architect William A. Baker to draw up plans for the reconstructed Mayflower. The two groups agreed to work together to build, sail, and later berth Mayflower II.

The Baker plans were given to the J.W. & A. Upham Shipyard, at Brixham, Devon, and a search for authentic materials began. Oak timbers were selected in nearby forests. Linen canvas sails were ordered from Francis Webster & Sons, and the true hempen line from Gourock Rope Works, both of Scotland. The keep was laid on July 28, 1955, and the partially completed ship was launched on September 22, 1956. By April of the following year, Mayflower II was ready for her historic voyage.

Alan Villiers, an experienced sailing shipmaster, as well as a well-known writer on the great days of sail, headed the Mayflower II’s crew. He selected his crew from experienced hands and other able men. The 33-man company included four newsmen, who worked as mariners as well, but no passengers.

The crew took the ship for sailing trials at Bixham on April 16, and she was then towed to Plymouth, Devon, from which port Mayflower II began her 55-day voyage to Plymouth, Massachusetts on April 20, 1957. Instead of sailing across the North Atlantic as the original Mayflower probably did, Captain Villiers took a southerly route south of the Canary Islands and then west to the Caribbean with the Trade Winds, and north to Plymouth. Fresh food ran out May 4, they were becalmed for a week, and spent much time cancelling the 100,000 pieces of ship’s mail. Mayflower II had no means of propulsion except for her sails; but there was a generator for the lights and the radio, and a modern wheel, which were required by law.

The first greetings to the New World came on June 5, from two ships in the Italian navy. Mayflower II hit her worst storm about 200 miles off Bermuda, finally arriving in Provincetown, Massachusetts, at 3 p.m., June 12. The next day Mayflower went on to Plymouth where an enthusiastic reception awaited, and on June 13, 1957, the long voyage was over.

Since 1957, Mayflower II has been a permanent exhibit of Plimoth Plantation. Plimoth Plantation is the outdoor living history museum of 17th century Plymouth. In addition to Mayflower II, its exhibits include a 1627 Pilgrim Village and a Wampanoag Family Campsite.

Scope and Content

The Mayflower II Papers, 1948-2007, consists of 18 boxes of materials accumulated by staff at Plimoth Plantation. The collection documents the fundraising, correspondence, and planning relating to the Mayflower II replica berthed in Plymouth, MA.

The documents include the plans, drawings, and charts from naval architect William A. Baker as well as some of his research materials used for reference. There is also correspondence between Plimoth Plantation and Mayflower Project, LTD. regarding the sale, berthing, and maintenance of the ship after its voyage from England to the United States. The archive also consists of some material pertaining to the Mayflower II as an exhibit of Plimoth Plantation after it’s arrival in Plymouth, MA.

The bulk of the collection, however, documents the maiden voyage in 1957. This includes legal documentation such as the Bill of Sale, insurance information, and signed agreements from the crew to serve the master. Additionally, the collection also includes Alan Villier’s Captain’s Log documenting each day of the journey as well as all of the letters and telegrams sent to the captain and crew.
