

A genealogical profile of Edward Burcher aka Vircher

Birth: If Emmanuel Altham can be believed (see below), Edward Burcher was born about 1543.

Death: Edward Burcher and his wife received two acres in the 1623 division of land. Their names to did not appear in the 1627 division of cattle, so they had died or left the colony by then.

Ship: Little James, 1623

Life in England: Nothing is known of his life in England.

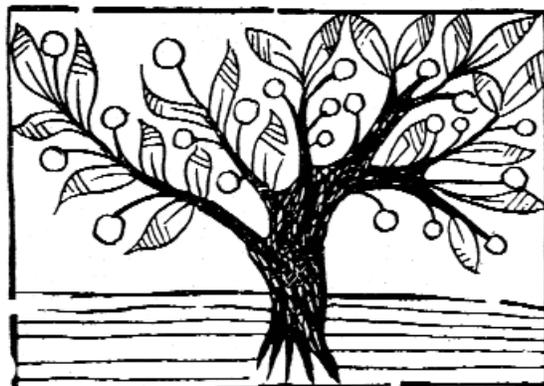

Life in New England: The Burchers appeared in a letter of 1623 by the master of the Little James, John Bridge, and Mrs. Burcher was the probable individual referred to by another passenger, Emmanuel Altham, in another letter written that year. In the first, Bridge said that “father Vircher and his wife were as hearty as the youngest on the ship.” Both “father,” used in this case as a term of respect, and the comparison imply significant age. Altham referred to “an old woman in our ship about four score [80] years of age, which was in good health.” Edward Vircher gave the two acres received in 1623 to another Plymouth colonist, Samuel Fuller, who mentioned them in his 1633 will. The Burchers do not again appear in Plymouth Colony records, and may have returned to England.

Family: The only two members of the family known are Edward and his wife, whose first name is unknown.

PLYMOUTH ANCESTORS

Where do I go from here?

Researching your family's history can be a fun, rewarding, and occasionally frustrating project. Start with what you know by collecting information on your immediate family. Then, trace back through parents, grandparents, and beyond. This is a great opportunity to speak to relatives, gather family stories, arrange and identify old family photographs, and document family possessions that have been passed down from earlier generations.

Once you have learned all you can from family members, you will begin to discover other sources. A wide variety of records can help you learn more about the lives of your ancestors. These include birth, marriage, and death records; immigration and naturalization records; land records; census records; probate records and wills; church and cemetery records; newspapers; passenger lists; military records; and much more.

When you use information from any source — an original record, a printed book, or a website — always be careful to document it. If you use a book, you should cite the author or compiler, the full title, publication information and pages used. Also be sure to record the author's sources for the information. If the author's sources aren't provided, you will have to try to find the original source. Many genealogical works contain faulty information, and the Internet also contains many inaccuracies. In order for your work to be accepted — by lineage societies and other genealogists — it must be properly documented.
