

A genealogical profile of William Gilson

Birth: He was born at the latest by 1610, but probably years earlier. He was referred to as “ancient” in 1649 deposition concerning some land he requested for his sister’s children.

Death: He died February 1, 1639/40.

Ship: Unknown, 1632

Life in England: Little is known of his life in England. According to the various documents related to the disposing of his estate, he had a married sister there. He had brought two of her children, John and Hannah Damman/Damon, to New England with him.

Life in New England: William Gilson’s name is listed in the 1633 list of Plymouth freemen. He moved to Scituate and built a house prior to September 1634. He served as a Governor’s assistant in 1633, as assessor in 1634 and 1637, and on a committee on trade in 1634. He also served on several juries. He owned a windmill, referred to in a codicil to his will relating to his nephew. Controversy had arisen after his death when, having acquired various lands claiming he needed them to provide for his sister’s children “as if they were his own,” the two received very little in his will. In the codicil, Gilson thought “that [Damman’s] Aunt would employ him in the windmille after his Death.” Eventually, the Court proclaimed John Damman/Damon was heir to his uncle’s lands.

Family: William Gilson married Frances _____ by January 8, 1634/5. No children of this couple were recorded.

Where do I go from here?

Researching your family's history can be a fun, rewarding, and occasionally frustrating project. Start with what you know by collecting information on your immediate family. Then, trace back through parents, grandparents, and beyond. This is a great opportunity to speak to relatives, gather family stories, arrange and identify old family photographs, and document family possessions that have been passed down from earlier generations.

Once you have learned all you can from family members, you will begin to discover other sources. A wide variety of records can help you learn more about the lives of your ancestors. These include birth, marriage, and death records; immigration and naturalization records; land records; census records; probate records and wills; church and cemetery records; newspapers; passenger lists; military records; and much more.

When you use information from any source — an original record, a printed book, or a website — always be careful to document it. If you use a book, you should cite the author or compiler, the full title, publication information and pages used. Also be sure to record the author's sources for the information. If the author's sources aren't provided, you will have to try to find the original source. Many genealogical works contain faulty information, and the Internet also contains many inaccuracies. In order for your work to be accepted — by lineage societies and other genealogists — it must be properly documented.
